- An official acceptance letter from the host institution

How to make a readable scan?

In order to make a readable scan of size compatible with the limits imposed by the application, you can proceed on 2 levels:

- During the digitization of the document
- By modifying the picture obtained after the digitization

During the digitization, you can:

- Limit the scanner resolution: 150 dpi is sufficient in order to correctly read the text document. If the file is too heavy despite the 150 dpi, you can decrease the resolution but not below 96 dpi. For the ID, you can start with a 300 dpi and reduce if the file exceeds 50 ko.
- Modify the depth of color: if the decrease of the resolution is not enough to give a correct size of the file, it is possible to modify the format from "color" to "shades of grey".
- Choose JPG format. Some scanners can additionnally adjust the JPG compression. The higher the quality, the heavier the file. You can try a 80% compression.

Modification of the otained image

By using a photo-editing application (Paint for Windows or Gimp for Linux), you can decrease the weight of a picture file:

- Change to a PNG or JPG format which allows a high compression rate.
- Reduce the quality of the image by also using the JPG format and the compression rate.
- Use shades of grey.
- Reduce the definition of the picture by decreasing its height and width.

Whatever the chosen method, always make sure that your file is perfectly readable before uploading it into the application.

Reload your browser if needed.
